THE STORY OF INDIANA.

WM. H. ENGLISH WILL GIVE IT COMPLETE IN HIS HISTORY.

A Work That He Has Been Engaged Upon For Many Years—The Vast Amount of Interesting Material He Has Accumulated.

It has been known for some time that William H. English was preparing a history of Indiana, but the full scope of the work has not been generally understood until the time when it would probably appear. A representative of The News who called on Mr. English this week has been furnished with some information on the subject. The work is intended to be a full and exhaustive history, not only of the State, but of the two territorial periods preceding the admission of Indiana to statehood—a history of the Northwest Territory and of the Indiana Territory formed in 1800, with William Henry Harrison as Governor. The territorial history will cover a wide and interesting field, as it involves not only the early exploration and settlement of the country northwest of the Ohio river extending to the Mississippi on the west and the great lakes on the north, but of the conquest of that vast empire from the British.

The two introductory volumes of Mr. English's work will be devoted mainly to these territorial events, especially to the acquisition of the country from the British, with sketches of the men who achieved it, to be followed in time by five volumes on the subsequent history of the State. These two volumes are publishers having been chosen as publishers of the history of Indiana before its political organization, will be issued during the present year. It is in size and of about four hundred pages each.

Mr. English permitted the inspection of much of his historical material and gave some interesting outlines of the work. Mr. English has been thorough in the task he has set himself to do. Evidently his object has been to make such a history that it will be left for any future historian of Indiana in the epochs that have been treated of by him. The time, place and manner of his work, however, have been secured an immense accumulation of material, which could only have been gathered by one endowed with a keen and true antiquarian taste.

Vast Amount of Material.

This accumulation, so large and varied in character, yet all bearing upon the work in hand, has astonished all who have seen it. Some of these friends have feared that by reason of its vastness the scope of the proposed work would expand to such an extent that Mr. English would not be able to complete it, in his lifetime. Even a synopsis of this collection would make a good-sized volume. He has, however, been an assiduous and systematic worker, and since he entered upon this literary labor has allowed nothing to draw him away from the long hours of the night.

In 1885 Mr. English was largely instrumental in calling together in this city, in a three days' session, the surviving members of the convention which framed the present constitution of Indiana, and the surviving members of all the legislatures that were held under the old constitution. This proved to be a gathering of remarkable interest, there being among the survivors then gathered Thomas A. Hendricks, Alvin R. King, William F. Niblack, John L. King, Oliver F. Bagder, William McKee Dunn, William S. Hollman, Robert N. Hudson, Richard W. Thompson and others of national reputation.

The importance of collecting and preserving, as far as possible, such historical material as pertains to early Indiana before all who had participated in this early history had passed away, was pointed out by Mr. English as chairman. The other members turned the matter over to him, trusting that he had the leisure and the means, as well as a fondness for that kind of research, from that day he has quietly and continuously devoted himself to this work, and he has been gathering his historical material for half a century.

How Mr. English Works.

His work-room is on the second floor, southeast corner of the English Hotel, and in a room below, on the ground floor, he has for some months kept two amanuenses and typewriters busily engaged preparing copy for the publisher.

He has three large fire-proof vaults filled with written and printed documents, pictures and other material bearing upon the history he is writing. These are all so arranged and indexed that any desired paper or relic of any kind can be found in an instant.

Asked what he purposed to do with these valuable relics when he has finished his work, he replied: "I shall have them placed in a public library or museum, but I should not like to risk their loss by fire or other disaster."

There are important and original papers of Thomas Jefferson, Patrick Henry, George Mason, Daniel Boone, Joseph Bowman, Samuel Johnston, John Gibson, William Henry Harrison, Arthur St. Clair, Anthony Wayne, Charles Scott, Shadrach Bond, Nathan Edwards, Henry Vanderburgh, John Johnston, Gen. Winthrop Sargent, Francis Vigo, Pierre Menard, Joseph Bartholomew, Spier Spencer, Jacob Barlick, Zachary Taylor, Thomas Posey, Jonathan Jennings and many others. The letters of Jennings are numerous, and some of them throw much light on his long and successful struggle to make a free State.

There are also many early Indiana papers in the collection, some of them dating back as far as 1800. It is scarcely known at this day that some of the papers ever had existed. This is probably true of a file of papers published in Indiana Territory in 1815 in the town of Lexington, now Scott county (then part of Jefferson). These papers disclose that the legal advertising was done in it for Harrison, Clark, Washington and Switzerland counties, as well as Jefferson, from which it may be inferred there were at that time no newspapers in the other counties. The publisher of this paper was then the printer of the Territory, and the laws of the period were printed in it.

The original historical documents are also very numerous, as well as portraits of historical characters, so much so that the writer, who made the above list, concluded that it would take him a week to make anything like a full examination, and did not make the attempt.

Some of these papers, over a hundred years old, crumble at a touch. These have been made secure for the work by means of facsimiles.

The illustrations.

The materials for illustration are abundant and interesting. There are plates of pictures of men connected with the political history of the Territories and the State, the number of 2,000 or more. When printed these will be grouped and will be so arranged that anyone who desired might be readily found. The authentic autographs of these men, prominent in their time, are quite as numerous as their pictures. To show how successful Mr. English has been in securing these pictures, often after a long and at times apparently hopeless search, it may be said that of the 150 men who formed the present constitution of the State over half a century ago, he has secured pictures of not but after He has himself and by friends and agents traveled thousands of miles to secure pictures of historical spots, of the remaining old houses in which noted men were born, or in which interesting happenings took place, and of Indian massacre are given. These necessarily are imaginative sketches, but the portrayals are faithful to tradition and to history.

In matters pertaining to the capture of Vincennes after their British post northwest of the Ohio by George Rogers Clarke, the collection is particularly strong, and contains much interesting data, which has never hitherto been available to the historian. The same is said of the epoch in which William Henry Harrison appeared as the central figure.

Among the valuable papers is an account of the Kaskaskia campaign, in a private letter written by Maj. Joseph Bowman in July, 1812, several months before the capture of Vincennes. Another interesting document is an official paper dated August 14, 1812, noting the death of Major Bowman as "having died in the service of the State of Virginia." This death, though occurring many months after the capture of the post, was probably due to injuries received in an explosion at "Fort Patrick Henry," as Ft. Sackville (Vincennes) was called for a time after its surrender to the Americans. It is in this way that the only death caused by the taking of the post or as a sequence of the capture of the capture of that fort which brought to Virginia and through her to the United States an empire of which the States were formed, as perhaps the most wonderful achievement in history, considering the cost.

The original pay roll of Major Bowman's men is among the relics. Here, also, is the patent from the State of Virginia, Edmund Randolph, Governor, of 18,000 acres to Clarke's men. These acres given to Clarke and his soldiers are situated in Clark, Floyd and Scott counties, this State, and the tract was known as Clarke's grant.

Lists of Men.

Mr. English, with great labor, has traced the title of every tract back to the person who served for it in order to obtain a complete list of the officers and soldiers of the campaigns which resulted in the reduction of the British posts. This list will appear in the introductory volumes, and will be the only full and entirely reliable roll of those soldiers ever published. The men who took part in Clarke's war were not in the continental service, and the lists are consequently not in the United States archives. This list will doubtless be of special interest to the numerous descendants of those soldiers.

Some time ago a gentleman called on Mr. English to discover whether an ancestor had been in Clarke's little army. Mr. English gave the information that he had been; that he was a cornet, and the inquirer was shown, upon an original map of the grant, the 2,000 acres that had been given him for his services. In this official map is shown a tract of land that was given to Simon Kenton, the famous Indian fighter, and this establishes the fact that Kenton was in the expedition that secured the Northwest Territory.

There is a number of writings and papers of Father Gibault, the famous priest who so faithfully and effectively co-operated with Clarke to secure the making of French at Kaskaskia and Vincennes and the Northwest Territory.

An interesting relic is an original writing of Daniel Boone, which is especially valuable, as it is the only one that to a considerable extent marks the original papers of George Rogers Clarke, and in this collection, "Squire Boone, a brother of the redoubtable Daniel, and nearly as famous as an Indian warrior, was for several years a resident of Harrison county, and was visited there by Boone."

The illustrations pertaining to the early history of Vincennes will be a pleasure to all who are interested in the subject. Among these is the house in which the first Indiana Territorial Legislature met, a small two-story frame and could hardly accommodate a large number of men. It was in this building in which an Indiana Legislature, territorial or State, has met with in this work. There will be a facsimile of the first law adopted by the Governor and judges in 1800, before the Legislature was formed, and a facsimile of the first law passed by the Territorial Legislature. Another is a facsimile of the first law passed by the Territorial Legislature, which was the prohibition extended only to selling to Indians. This document bears the signature of William Henry Harrison.

Following the signatures of Vincennes French names are frequent in the history. Among these is that of Pierre Menard, of the first legislative council of Indiana territory, but who has been appropriated by many counties. Mr. English in his history will make apparent a fact, but little known, that the first legislative council of the State of Indiana, which met at Kaskaskia, in 1800, John Gibson, territorial secretary, estimated the population of four counties, a white man, Darbort, Clark, Knox and Randolph to be 3,200 people. Randolph county was in what is now Illinois, and like the other counties named extended over a great area, which has subsequently been divided into many counties. We have just let a contract for the re-painting and re-varnishing of our store. Work on it will not commence before the 1st of August.

We require the intervening time to reduce our stock—too many goods in the painter's way, for the store, from street to alley, from floor to ceiling, pillars, posts, counters, shelving—all will feel the dabs of the painter's brush. He will be a big man while at work here—a regular Czar. Nothing must stand in his way. We can't store the goods in the cellar, we can't be continually moving them from place to place. We MUST sell them—that's the idea—and only about three weeks to do it in. That's the cause that brings about this.

ALTERATION SALE

COMMENCES MONDAY, JULY 15. In the meantime our force will be kept busy, re-marking and re-arranging stock, for you must know that BARGAINS will have full away here.

DEATH OF GEO. G. GRADY.

ONCE FAMOUS AS "G. G." IN THE CIRCUS BUSINESS.

Sketch of His Career—How He Began With a Puppet Show and Afterward Operated a Large Circus—Decline of His Fortunes.

George Gillespie Grady, who was, at one time in the '70s, a rival showman of Barnum, Forepaugh and John Robinson, died last night at 8:30 o'clock at his home, 407 West Second street. He had been sick for about three weeks with congestion of the lungs, which, with other complications, caused death.

GEORGE G. GRADY.

"G. G." as he was better known, was in the show business for half a century, only retiring three years ago. He was born at Leipzig, O., in 1832. When he was a motherless boy ten years old, near Tiffin, O., a man named Green came along with a puppet show, which gave an exhibition at the school-house. The man needed music, and Grady played "The Arkansas Traveler" on a fiddle for him. He engaged the boy to travel with him. After four weeks the proprietor of the puppet show gave the show to him in lieu of salary, and left the boy with 50 cents and seven puppets. The boy advertised another show at a small town, took in $7.50, and departed with his puppets and the money. Grady often told this story about himself, saying that he departed surreptitiously and was only conceding to the enthusiastic demand of the audience that he "was in the show." Grady said he did "go on" with it for over ten miles. He practiced with his puppets until he understood how to give a fair show.

From that small beginning he grew until he had a circus, menagerie and museum that traveled in its own cars, pulled by its own engine, and which was regarded as a large circus. Grady was operating this show James A. Bailey, who is now at the head of the Barnum-Bailey show, was his ticket seller. Grady became wealthy, and at one time was the largest taxpayer in Hamilton county, paying taxes on $40,000 worth of rolling stock alone. The panic of 1874 caused him to lose $2,000, and the next year he lost $35,000. When the Grady show was at its best, "G. G." was the clown of the circus. He bought a gallery of automatic figures that he said he knew "could not eat, drink or draw salary, or lie down and die." He was successful with this show and afterward subdivided it into five separate shows. Afterward he operated a small circus that visited small towns, but as his business gradually declined he retired three years ago, and has done nothing since.

At one time Mr. Grady managed a variety theater at Ft. Wayne, and was for a time connected with the Park theater here.

Mr. Grady married in this city at the old Mason House, Miss Lulu F. Holman, in 1874. The marriage resulted in the birth of two sons, John and George G., both of whom are living. Mr. Grady had brothers living in St. Louis and Hamilton county, Ohio. The funeral will take place at his late home, Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

ORDERS TO THE MILITIA.

Concerning the Encampment To Be Held at Fairview Park.

The Indiana National Guard is preparing to move on Indianapolis the last of next week. The camp of instruction will be established at Fairview Park, Sunday, July 15, and will be broken, Saturday, the 27th. Adjutant-General Robbins and his assistants are busy looking after the details of the arrangements for the week's outing. They have discovered that there is a great deal of labor connected with preparations to care for 2,500 men for seven days. The last general order issued gives the following information to the young soldiers:

"No man recruited after July 4, 1895, will be permitted to be brought to camp except by special permission from the brigade commander."

"Commanding officers will put their commands in readiness to move via route and at hour to be hereafter designated."

"Transportation and subsistence will be furnished by the State."

"Officers and men joining after the tour of duty has begun, or returning home before the tour of duty has ended (except on sick leave), must do so at their own expense. Transportation, subsistence and per diem will be furnished for authorized servants or cooks for regimental messes and camp headquarters."

"Transportation and subsistence only will be furnished for authorized servants of officers. Officers entitled to be mounted will be allowed fourteen dollars for the use of horses furnished by themselves, with forage while in camp. To receive this allowance the quartermaster-general must be notified not later than July 10 of the intention of each officer. No transportation will be allowed for horses."

"The quartermaster-general will make all necessary purchases for food, fuel, subsistence and protection of officers and men, and forage for horses, and contract for horses for officers and batteries, where not furnished. He will also furnish blankets, bed sacks and straw. Company commanders will report to the quartermaster-general by July 10, the number they will have in camp."

"Any officer certifying to the presence of any member of his company who is absent, or of any citizen at an enlisted man, shall be fined not more than fifty dollars, and in a jail not more than three months, or both, by sentence of a general court-martial."

"The annual clothing allowance for the year 1895 is hereby prescribed at $2.50 per man, to be paid for a uniform, for each enlisted man of the active militia, provided that no uniform shall be issued to any company that fails to show proper efficiency."

"No bills will be paid for any supplies furnished or services performed except those authorized by the quartermaster-general for this office."

"Cooks will not be paid unless all utensils of their command are returned to the quartermaster-general strictly clean, and dry at the close of the tour of duty."
